Kalam chose that the book is divided into four sections: Orientation (the first 32 years of his life), Creation (the next 17 years), Ate questioning (the next 10 years) and Contemplation (and more). The first chapter tells the story of his childhood and upbringing in a Muslim middle-class family in Rameshwaram and a school in Ramanathapuram. He is also involved in early aviation engineering education at the Madras Institute of Technology in Chennai. The Chapter Creation follows seventeen years of his life from 1963 to 1980, where he describes his experiences in the United States, including the Langley Research Centre and Wallops Flight Facility. He describes encountering an Indian image of the Battle of Tipu Sultan at a NASA facility and how it made him happy. It is in this section that he talks about his relationship with several important projects, such as the pioneering success of Satellite Launch Vehicle (SLV-3) and Thumba. It was this stage of his life that led him to national recognition, culminating in Padma Bhushan in 1981. In The Atteachment, which covers the period from 1981 to 1991, Kalam takes the reader to the stage of defending his career, where he resuscitates the crumbling research institutes and R&D defense organizations, finally taking over the DRDO and bringing the most modern weapons and delivery systems to India. As he enters the scene of contemplation, he describes the achievement of the nation's highest prize, Bharat Ratna.
